Chris van Uffelen : Residential Architecture for Senior Citizens before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Residential Architecture for Senior Citizens:

Citizens in retirement age are becoming an ever greater but also more active part of society. Along with this demographic and socio-cultural shift a new emphasis is placed on living quality and atmosphere at home beyond functionality and clinical cleanliness. In contrast to the general idea of retirement home, senior residences of today are superbly designed and furnished service domiciles. Care and medical support are of course part of the extensive offer. Common areas and services can, but must not be used. A winning design is a powerful argument in the competition among the providers. The buildings selected for this book are tailored to meet the special, very individual needs of today's senior citizens society.
